Weekly Update: Next Partitions

October 19, 2026 · First report

This is our first report, so it covers everything built so far, not just this week. From here on you'll get a short update like this every Monday.

What we've built so far

1. A new homepage with three ways in — Price it yourself (the configurator), send your plans, or shop the catalogue. Industry tiles lead to your industry pages, and the brands you carry are shown up front.
   Homepage
2. Installer pages for Dallas–Fort Worth — A Texas page, a Dallas–Fort Worth page with a map of who covers where, and a profile page for each installer. They sit apart from your main site: the homepage and the menu never link to them, so shoppers stay on the configurator and the catalogue.
   Texas · Dallas–Fort Worth · Installer profile
3. A quick pricer on the installer pages — Built on the configurator Marc made, with the same questions, shown one at a time on the Dallas–Fort Worth page. What we added: an installation estimate next to the partitions price, the price shown only after the visitor gives an email (so every price check becomes a lead), and a drawings upload.
   Try it
4. An installation step for Marc's configurator, for later — Designed, not switched on. Marc's configurator stays as it is until installers are approved and working well. It would then appear only where approved installers cover the job, with a price range; if it isn't worth it, we leave it out.
   Installation step
5. The full job, from quote to installed restroom — The customer's quote page (approve drawings, choose an installer, pay by card, bank transfer or purchase order). The installer's portal (price the job from their agreed rates, ask questions through you, set the date, mark it installed). Your view of every job, including what happens when nobody prices. And the review form.

6. Getting installers listed — An application page for installers, and our checklist for approving them: insurance, city or business registration, references we call, a timed test job and the signed listing agreement.
   Apply page · Approval checklist
7. Every email written — Ten emails: the price range, job requests and reminders to installers, "your options are ready", "you've been chosen", "the job is yours", the review request, and three for when no installer has priced yet.
   All emails

8. The system behind it, built and tested — Customer details stay hidden from installers until the customer has chosen them and paid (or the school's purchase order is accepted). Up to three suitable installers are invited to price each job with a deadline; if nobody prices, the search widens once and your team is alerted. Prices well above an installer's agreed rates are flagged, and phone numbers and emails are blocked from messages until the job is released. Ready for Marc to connect to the site.
9. Plans and research — Your February SEO strategy checked against the live site, 147 installer search terms mapped to pages, a guide to installer licensing by state and city (Texas, Dallas, Miami-Dade), the onboarding roadmap, and our proposal for how jobs are shared between installers.

All installers, prices and reviews in the samples are made up. Nothing is live on your site yet; these are working previews.

What we need from you

- Your yes on how installation is quoted — Installers price from rates agreed with us, no markup on installation, up to three prices per job, and the reply targets (1 business day, firm price in 2). We can go through it on a short call.
- Who runs jobs on your side — One person who sends customers their options and keeps delivery and install dates on track.
- Your CRM, if you use one — And how many people would use it. If you don't, we recommend HubSpot.
- Installers you already trust — Names of any installers you work with, so we can invite them first. We need three approved to launch Dallas–Fort Worth.
- A Google Maps key — From your Google Cloud account, for the real maps and drive distances.
- Access for Marc — GitHub or Lovable access so we can add this to the live site, the email service the site uses, and whether hiding /products from Google is on purpose.
- Your lawyer's review — The installer listing agreement and the wording on who quotes and bills installation.

Coming next

- Recruiting the first installers — Inviting Dallas–Fort Worth installers to apply and vetting them; the directory launches once three are approved.
- Finishing the system — Saving leads from the price step, change orders, installer applications and reviews.
- Building it into your site — As soon as Marc gives access, starting with the Dallas–Fort Worth pages.
- More areas — Houston, Austin and San Antonio pages, and an installed-cost guide.
